SHOPPING NOTES

Spotlight on Catalina

HISTORY

Although the bulk of Santa Catalina Island is now owned by the Catalina Island Conservancy, whose charge it is to preserve the Island for posterity, Santa Catalina Island has at various times been the private property of a number of individual owners. Thomas Robbins was the first Californian to own the Island, having acquired title from the last Mexican Governor of California, Pio Pico. Title passed from Robbins to a number of different owners - each with his personal dream for this isolated piece of land - until the Banning brothers purchased Santa Catalina Island in the late 19th century. The Bannings planned to develop the Island as a resort, and much of the initial development of Avalon took place during their ownership.

When William Wrigley Jr. acquired a majority interest in the Santa Catalina Island Company from the Bannings in 1919, the destiny of the Island began to change forever. This now-historic event cast the die for permanently preserving substantially all of Santa Catalina Island in its natural state.

During the next 56 years, various conservation practices were initiated by the Wrigley-led Santa Catalina Island Company, including much-needed animal controls, protection of watersheds and reseeding of overgrazed areas.

LOCAL FLAVORS

Catalina Island is so tranquil many visitors cannot believe the area is actually part of LA County, but the prevalence of top designer names in the Catalina Island clothing stores is a dead give-away. The fine designer brands are sold alongside local stores with art prints and watercolors featuring birds and other elements from nature. Deco inspired styles abound, hand-painted fabric and unique shell jewelry are very popular.

SHOPPING NOTES

Spotlight on Ensenada

HISTORY

In colonial times, galleons bound for Acapulco from Manila made Ensenada their home. The first settlement was established in 1804. There was a short-lived boom in 1870 with the discovery of gold inland at Real del Castillo. Ensenada was named capital of the Baja territory from 1882 until 1915. The capital was then moved to Mexicali during the revolution. After the revolution, Ensenada became a gambling town. That ended in the 1930's when the government outlawed gambling.

Today, Ensenada is a blend of a fishing and commercial port, industrial development, tourist center and party town. Fishing and surfing are very popular. In addition, Ensenada is the source of 90% of the very best Mexican wines. Ensenada Bay is host to awe-inspiring sights from December to March – gray whale watching.

LOCAL FLAVORS

Ensenada is a festive town that makes every day feel like a celebration. There are monthly jazz concerts, Mexican cerveza flows freely, people fill the streets, and wine lovers can even find good, locally grown ino from the oldest winery in Mexico.
